Figure 8-2 demonstrates the results when the user selects NEW. The same defaults are provided as shown in previous chapters. The only visual change is the text of the input button. The weakness of this approach occurs when the users do not have JavaScript enabled. For this example, if JavaScript is not enabled, you will require that all information be entered. You could request the individual dog information from the dog_data class (via the Dog class). While this approach is not as efficient as the JavaScript approach you are about to use, it is more customer friendly than requiring the entry of all the information.
